Tell the Tale

When I came home today from school I really didn't think much about the doors to our van being open. The two girls and Tanner frequently will close one door and leave the other standing open. Thankfully, this vehicle will turn off the interior lights after a few minutes so as not to send the battery into a permanent state of lifelessness. As I was coming down our driveway, I did not see the three youngest of our family in the van. I exited my car and started walking to the front door when I heard those giggles that are a pleasure to hear at the end of the day.

The two girls come bounding and bouncing out of the van and, in rapid-fire kid language, told me they were cleaning up inside the van. I asked where Tanner was and they replied that he was in the van. Then they proceeded to inform me that they were cleaning up Tanner's mess in the van that he had strewn around his seat. He had something sticky in the jack where he plugs in his headphones. The girls told me about it. Tanner overheard and came out of the van crying and wailing. "It was an accident," he wailed as a few tears managed to find their way out. To make matters worse, the girls, Keaton, and I started laughing. After we calmed him down, we asked why he was crying. He replied, "They were telling on me!" Tell the tale.

Imagine if we could spend as much energy doing those things we know we should do. We procrastinate, we obfuscate, maybe even meditate about those things we should do, those things we are commanded to do, yet here we are again. Another week has passed and we show up Sunday morning feeling guilty that perhaps we should have done a little more during the week to "Tell the Tale."

It's a verse so often used and heard but it still has the most important, powerful meaning. "Then Jesus said to them, "So wherever you go in the world, tell everyone the Good News.", Mark 16:14, God's Word translation.

We have so many ways today that we can spread the Good News. We do so little. It isn't somebody else's responsibility. It is mine; it is yours. Tell the tale.
