Telling the Story

I really like a good story. I enjoy dramas, science fiction, and most any good stories. I like biographies as well; especially those of our presidents. Today, the stories seem to be shorter stories told in movies and television. We see news of how children are molested, our things are stolen, the economy is depressed, how murderers walk among us, and our enemies are knocking at the door. We hear local stories of immoralities committed by those we have held to a high standard, and we revel when we see the story unfold of how someone has prevailed when wronged. These are all stories that are part of our daily lives, and we must deal with them.

Just as these stories are told, John of Patmos tells the story of Heaven, of walls of jasper, a city of gold like clear glass. He tells the story of New Jerusalem. He says that all old things have passed away and been made new. He speaks of a loud voice saying, “I am the Alpha, the Omega, the beginning and the end.” His story of Heaven continues to tell of how God’s dwelling place is now among the people and he will dwell with them. John tells of how God will give to the thirsty, without cost, the spring of the water of life.

As a matter of fact, we sing a song, “I Love to Tell the Story” of Jesus and His love. We tell the story of Christ, the message of salvation from God’s own holy Word! Yet another song is “Tell Me the Old, Old Story.” While the two are very close, they still tell the same story -- the story of the sacrifice of Jesus because of His love for us. No matter how the world chooses to interpret the story, with belief, unbelief, or disinterest, the story still stands. The love and the sacrifice comes through as the story is told. Jesus wept, Jesus died, Jesus lives. It was for me and for you, and you, and you.

Yet, how often do we tell the story? It’s the most important story to tell. The beginning and the end. He is there at both those times. We need to tell His story from our beginning to our end. Jesus did.
